IMKAAN LEADS REGIONAL GROUP OF EXPERTS ON INTERSECTIONAL DISCRIMINATION AND VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Women are subjected to discrimination based on their sex and gender which is inextricably linked to other identities, factors, and experiences such as a race, ethnicity, location, and poverty.

To address the intersectionality between violence against women and other forms of discrimination, UN Women has signed an agreement with Imkaan, a Black and 'minority ethnic' women's organization to support the establishment of a Regional Expert Working Group (REWG) on intersectional discrimination, in the context of the regional programme on ending violence against women in the Western Balkans and Turkey: Implementing Norms, Changing Minds.

Imkaan will develop a road map for the establishment of the expert working group informed by the voices of minoritized women leaders working to end violence against women in the Western Balkans and Turkey.

With almost two decades of experience working in partnership with, and supporting 'by and for' women's organizations, Imkaan is uniquely placed to provide a strong intersectional analysis on violence against women. The NGO boasts a robust research and policy base utilizing both internal and external expertise, and has demonstrated experience working internationally including the United Nations.

CIVIL SOCIETY HAS THE POTENTIAL TO PLAY A MAJOR ROLE IN ENDING VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Women's organizations in Albania have traditionally been active in combating violence against women, particularly in influencing legislative processes and providing services to survivors of violence. However, at times, their voice and presence is not as strong as it could be. Agustela Nini-Pavli, technical project analyst at UN Women Albania, explains how the regional programme will contribute to improve the capacity of civil society organizations to fight violence against women.
